The long term goal of the proposed research is to develop treatment alternatives to systemic chemotherapy for adult patients with high-risk neuroblastoma, using trastuzumab and bortezomib in combination with liposome/hyaluronic acid-based nanoparticles. While the efficacy of chemotherapy against high-risk neuroblastoma is impressive, it is accompanied by a host of serious complications due to the non-specific delivery of chemotherapeutic drugs and the toxicity of free chemotherapeutic agents on normal tissues. More effective approaches, such as the use of targeted chemotherapy, are essential. We have developed novel, sustained-release, high- efficiency polymeric nanoparticles (LNPs) that have the potential to selectively target tumor tissues and release chemotherapeutic drugs over a prolonged period of time. We hypothesize that LNPs loaded with high doses of cytotoxic drugs will have greater killing effect on neuroblastoma cells than traditional methods that produce only short-term cytotoxicity. The specific aims of this study are to optimize preparation of the LNPs and to establish their toxicity and bio-distribution in neuroblastoma xenograft mice. To test this hypothesis, the Specific Aims are as follows: (1) To develop and characterize LNPs formulations, and estimate their efficacies against neuroblastoma cells in vitro. (2) To determine the biodistribution and toxicity of LNPs in neuroblastoma xenograft mice. (3) To determine the efficacy of LNPs for therapeutic treatment of neuroblastoma in neuroblastoma xenograft mice. The first two aims are to use a nanotechnology approach. The last aim is to use the drug nanotechnology approach. Together, these studies will provide novel approach to the treatment of neuroblastoma. [unreadable] [unreadable] Parapox Virophages: A new Perspective in Virus-Virus Interaction. Parapoxviruses (PPVs) are the largest group of group-specific (Gs) DNA viruses, including the highly pathogenic molluscum contagiosum-associated viruses (MCVs), and cause significant morbidity in immunocompromised and pregnant patients. Recent studies have identified a novel role for the PPV "virophages" as potent effectors of MCV pathogenesis. We propose that a novel interaction exists between PPVs and a distinct group of virophages that together may form the basis of

11. When you need to "paint" with colors, you can use the Paint Bucket tool (Figure 3). 12. The Paint Bucket tool allows you to control a color in an image, copy an existing color and paste it onto a new area. Pens (Figure 4) are similar to brushes, except that, instead of a fixed size, pens have varied widths. You can use pens to create your own custom brush strokes. Brushes | DIY brushes When you create your own custom brushes, you can also change the way a brush fills, determines its hardness, and the size of its pixels — affecting the result. 13. A new feature in Photoshop CS4 is the ability to create your own brushes directly from your photo. In the paint bucket, highlight the brush you want to customize and click the Brush Properties button (Figure 5). 14. The Brush Properties dialog box opens. 15. You can type in any name or descriptive word for the brush. 16. In the Tool Type section, you can select from the available brushes that you have already installed in Photoshop. 17. In the Size section, you can change the size of the brush pixels. Drag the slider to adjust the brush size. 18. In the Shape section, you can select a custom shape or preset for the brush. When you select the preset, a preview of the shape appears to the left of the fields. 19. A preview of the brush will be displayed when you hover the mouse over it. Click on the preview to set the brush size and shape. 20. To create a new brush, click OK. 21. The new brush will appear in the New Brush section of the Brush Tool options. 2. Create a New Brush from a Library Item 1. Click the New Brush button (Figure 6) and choose the Quick Brush option. 2. The Windows Start menu opens, and you find the Quick Brushes folder. This is where all your custom brushes reside. 3. In the Quick Brushes folder, click the Example Brushes folder and select `_any_` available brush. 4. The Design view of Photoshop opens, showing the brush.
